

Abstract

A method for forming an anti-glare layer, including the step of: ejecting droplets of an ink with an ink-jet apparatus onto a transparent substrate so as to form a microscopically roughened structure on the transparent substrate, wherein the ink contains an ingredient capable of giving an anti-glare property to the transparent substrate.